

Part of a stroke on a timpani top. The top strip is from a Polytec laser vibrometer and the bottom strip from a microphone. The Structural Resonance papers state that the airborne sound wave, which is created from an interface to a standing structure, is more complex than the structure that creates it. Here is visible proof that this is true

